Cuisinart food processor dlc-8e manual

Lastmanuals provides you a fast and easy access to the user manual CUISINART DLC8E. We hope that this CUISINART DLC8E user guide will be useful to you. Pro Custom 11™ Food Processor. DLC8S Series. For your safety and continued enjoyment of this product, always read the instruction book carefully before using. Unplug from outlet when not in use, before putting on or taking off parts and before cleaning. Do not let cord hang over edge of table or counter, or touch hot surfaces. If the sausage is thin enough to fit in the small feed tube, use that tube. Otherwise, cut the sausage into pieces to fit the large feed tube completely. Stand the pieces vertically, packing them in tightly so they cannot tilt sideways. Put it in the freezer until it is semifrozen hard to the touch but easily pierced with the tip of a sharp knife. Stand the pieces in the feed tube and apply light pressure to the pusher. IMPORTANT Never try to slice soft cheese like Mozzarella or hard cheese like Parmesan. Therefore, only attempt to shred Mozzarella or Parmesan when at the appropriate temperature, otherwise the cheeses will not shred well or damage to the machine could occur. TYPE OF CHEESE Soft. Brie, Camembert, ricotta, Liederkranz, cottage, cream exception mozzarella SemiSoft. Blue, Fontina, Bel Paese SemiHard. Cheddar, Monterey Jack, Longhorn, Swiss, Jarlsberg, Edam, Gouda, Provolone Hard. Parmesan, Romano, Pecorino, Sapsago Liquid leaks from bottom of bowl onto motor base Remove bowl from base as soon as you finish processing. When bowl and blade are removed together, blade drops down and forms an almost perfect seal against the bowl. Liquid leaks out between bowl and cover when machine is running You added too much liquid. The thicker the liquid, the more you can use. Slices are uneven or slanted Pack feed tube more carefully, as described on pages 16 and 17. Carrot, or similar food falls over in feed tube Cut food into enough short pieces of equal height to fill feed tube. <http://www.aba67.free.fr/userfiles/how-to-manually-open-ports-in-internet-connection-firewall-in-windows-vista.xml>

Cut carrots in half and insert one piece point down and the other stem down. Sliced or shredded food piles up on one side of work bowl This is normal. A few pieces of food remain on top of slicing or shredding disc This is normal. In most cases, you can shred more of the food by moving the large pusher up and down, allowing the piece to be shredded, or by repositioning the piece in the feed tube and reshredding it. Soft cheese like Mozzarella spreads out and collects on top of shredding disc The cheese was not cold enough, or the pressure on the pusher was too hard. CLEANING AND STORING Keep your food processor ready to use on the kitchen counter. Dont leave the pusher assembly in locked position; this could damage the onoff mechanism.Lastmanuals, for instance, does not offer a translation service. I took my blades with me and they fit the new machine. DONT WASTE YOUR TIME AND MONEY unless you find an old machine at a yard sale THE PARTS COSTS AS MUCH AS A NEW MACHINE ON SALE. ees Login to post Or you can contact direct I think your best investment is to get it fixed. I got one a few months ago on Ebay at a fraction of the cost of buying a new food processor. Cuisinart parts are popular on Ebay.

The generation for this model can be identified by two switches being located off to the right side when viewing the machine from the front. It is important to note that the designator at the end of your model name do not matter for part selection, they only indicate the various accessories that originally came with your food processor. As long as it is a Cuisinart DLC8 and from the same generation the guides from this page should work. Important For DLC8 models, there was a recall on riveted blades. By continuing to use our website, you agree to our updated Terms of Use and Privacy Policy. Were the old ones built better, more solid, better blades, more metal, or anything like that. Did the old ones have less safety interlocks less would be good, as far as Im concerned. Are the new ones better designed, did they fix weak spots I realize Robot Coupe makes many different models, but in general what is the advantage, if any, for a home cook. This may sound silly, but isnt the opaque bowl of most Robot Coupes an inconvenience. You cant see what consistency the food has achieved. To chop meat.

I dont own a stand mixer, so the food processor will be used for any dough tasks that it can manage. As well as emulsions, sauces, pesto, nuts, etc. Hopefully it will be the last food processor I buy. And it is rather light duty last time I made lobster bisque, I tried to grind up the shells and my Braun could barely turn. The Cuisinart owner was a Frenchborn engineer as well as a cook and made many of the changes himself. I actually have those and have been told by the replacement parts people to keep them. One of my bowls went recently and I need to purchase another and they are obnoxiously expensive and have IMO a bad design but those are the only replacements available. The Lexan seems to fail after 30 years, which is reasonable. Also, whether they have a full set of disks with the machine those were optional. The French Fry cutter is great for cutting brunoise fairly quickly though that can depend on your knife skills. In not, Id go for an RC. Wouldnt buy a Cuisinart brand now. I too have a DLC7 from the early 80s. The DLC8 and my Kitchenaid 5A were among the first things I bought once I started earning a regular paycheck. About 2 years later, I gave the DLC8 to my mother and got the DLC7. I bought the complete set of discs a couple of years later. There are discs in the set which have never been used. After I die, they will probably end up on ebay. I found a replacement on ebay, but as I was afraid that the FP would fail, I bought an entire new DLC7 as backup. Of course my trusty original continues to chug away nearly 30 years since I got it. I use it regularly, at least several times a week. It has some cracks around the top of the motor, but I still use the original blades. But between the two theres only one operable bowl and food chute. The older chute survived better than the one with the small round pusher. But I really do need one new bowl and top assembly. I cant imagine anything working as well as the 7.

Though I havent tried the newest Robot Coupe, which gets great reviews on Chowhound. Only the plug is worn. These are such wonderful friends and lifelong kitchen companions. Little wonder I have so little patience with what we should accept as ok in the kitchen today. Its pretty cool with the Sabatier serrated blade. I thought it might be a bit dull and took it to get sharpened and the guy said it was still plenty sharp. I think the only difference between the RC1A and the RC2000 is the year they were made theyre both 7 cups. So because I thought the RC1A was a 14 cup but wasnt, I was looking at the DLC7s because I really wanted a larger machine I already have a Cuisinart DLC 5 which is a 7 cup model made in Japan and works great and the DLC7s are 14 cups, and ended up now with a DLC7M, and DLC Super Pro. My family thinks Ive flipped out because I was on ebay looking and bidding on these for 3 months. I told them Im collecting processors. Well actually, the 1st ebay purchase DLC7 Super Pro arrived damaged. I havent yet used the DLC7 but am looking forward to trying rococogurls choux paste!! Thanks again for the fun read. I have a Cuisinart from 1979 model CFP 9 made in France. Originally, the processor came with a work bowl that had a column in the middle that held the shaft for the slicing disks. In the early 1980s Cuisinart recalled the work bowl and disks and sent out replacements. The replacement disks had a removable shaft. I have tried to use these disks and shaft with the new work bowl, but they are too tall so that the work bowl lid will not fit tightly enough to engage the motor. The slicing blades are DCL8 DCL837 and DCL844. I am a bit on the analytical side, and research everything more than I need to before I buy it. I have found this thread an AWESOME education. I was looking to get a Food Processor and non plused by most of the crappy models I have seen in the stores.

As I was looking through here I remembered my parents had given me a food processor around the time my wife and I were married, but I didn't think it worked as I had tried once to get it to go and it would do nothing. They had bought two at Tuesday Morning, and had one also but it sat in the garage as my mom was just too old fashioned to use it. Well after reading here and elsewhere I started to doubt myself. Perhaps mine wouldn't budge because the safety mechanism wasn't properly engaged. I reopened the one they had given me and sure enough the safety mechanism was sorta jammed, and after a little monkeying with it everything clicked and it whirred quiet and content, and now doesn't jam at all. It may be made in China but the motor sounds very good. I am rather impressed with it and how it sounds compared to the newer ones out now. This is probably a model from about 10 years ago. The best part is even if this motor isn't as great as the Japanese ones. I have TWO of these! so if one fizzles I got a back up. I have repaired motors on power tools before so I also feel pretty good about working on them should the need arise. I also know a little bit about motors, and honestly made in China or not, this appears to be pretty decent. Will all disks for 11 and 7 cup work. I need to know what to look for on Ebay thrift stores etc. I noted on the website all the blades for mine said 7 or 11 cup food processors. Also is there anywhere that SHOWS the results of using different blades. I am a visual person, and wish the blades would show a picture of their handy work. Would help me decide which I need. Also how do you keep veggies at a 90 degree angle on the blades. People joke about those things but man their awesome for making quick and dirty cuts without overly cutting stuff like a processor can. Would use that as a guide or call their customer care. After the company was sold to Con Air no idea clear what happened with blades.

The best set was for the DLC 7, with the removeable stems. There are 2mm thin, 4 mm regular and 6 mm thick slicer 8 mm extra thick slicing discs. There is a 6 mm French fry disc and a 2 mm julienne disc. Also medium and fine shredding discs. These were also sold in a set with a plastic holder. The Japanese made DLC 7 had the most accessories. Why I hold onto those. But the lids are not interchangeable so it can be tricky. Always buy bowls and lids together. Best to pack chute tightly so nothing twists. If you need to cut less, observe which way the disc rotates, then pack against the side of the chute opposite the direction of the blade rotation keeps the food in place. Otherwise, centrifugal force cause things to twist on top of the disc as it cuts. Pressure on the pusher needs to be even. It just takes a bit of practice as the machine works so quickly. Do any Cuisinart blades fit. I find the RC replacement blades from professional supply stores ridiculously expensive. Any guidance appreciated! Robot Coupe and Cuisinart blades are not interchangeable. I agree about the cost of replacement parts. I do have a Cuisinart, but its the RC1 made by Robot Coupe in France, so its the old one, referred to by you in your first post. I have a couple of the DLC 10 blades plastic and metal that do work in it, but the shredder and slicer blades on the posts are the ones Im curious about. Will those DLCs not fit The 10 was made in Japan. He kept tweaking each new model. The other complaint I heard was about the slicing discs having finger holes to help lift on and off, and they got rid of those because food was falling through. I do make bread in it sometimes, and was thinking about the 12 cup, but I dont want problems. Are they interchangeable with a CFP 5. Work bowl Im not having any luck finding a bowl and wonder if I read correctly that there is a newer model Cuisinart DLC7 and that bowl will fit. Did I read that right John Lui.

Can anybody else confirm that Available on Ebay quite often although usually previously used. Ive had the DLC7 since the early 80s and it still works great. I found a DLC7 Super Pro at a garage sale recently. I really wanted it for the replacement bowl. I got it home and it works great. My old 7 seems to have a larger feed tube shaped differently too than the Super Pro. Other than that, I dont know the difference. I have a SuperPro, on the bottom it says 6 amps, which works out to 720 watts, 6 amps X 120 volts, is your regular DLC 7 other than 6 amps My DLC7 shows the same volts and Hz as the SuperPro, but shows 560 watts.doesnt show amps. Also, my mistake feed tubes are the same. It does seem that the older DLC7 is heavier. Now I need to justify having two food processors taking up real estate lol! I had an original 1970s Cuisinart, which I replaced with a DLC7 made in Japan in the 80s. I acquired some stem and removeable stem disc, and I used it so much it was yellowing and even acquired a melt spot being too close to a stove pan. This bothered me aesthetically, so I bought a new DLC7 Custom which has served me well with all the previous various discs. In moving recently, I discovered the old Japan DLC7 and was just about to sell it for peanuts until I read this blog info. I think I will keep my old one if for no other reason than it is better than the new ones, if I ever need a back up. It seems whats old is new again! I am not sure what to do with it as I have a newer one and a new KitchenAid Pro mixer. My kitchen is full of appliances!! Any suggestions other than ebay for rehomeing this for a great price. If anyone has interest, plmk. Apologies if this question is out of bounds. thx The one on eBay is in worse condition than the one I owned. Does anyone have any ideas of other sources to replace my machine Thanks. Perhaps your local cookware store like WS or SLT could point you toward a vintage source.

And there is always persisting on eBay setting up an alert and waiting for the right unit to show up. Insurance might cover but the deductible is high. Ill keep searching. Very informative discussion. I have a CFP 5A and need to find a replacement shredder blade. These had a fixed stem on them. Is there any suitable replacement that is not the original part. They are very difficult to find. Thanks for any help you can give! It is an RC 2000. The bowl started fitting very tightly and this week broke around the handle. I called robot coupe parts and they said they only carry commercial parts. I still have all the parts that came with it and hate to get rid of it Any suggestions. Is there a market on eBay if I cant find a bowl I am interested in your old dlc7. Wish I had seen this earlier. It has a 2 piece pusher which I hate. These are available on Ebay with the pusher I prefer I have contacted Cuisinart and searched the internet, but cannot find the replacement parts I need. Set up a Saved Search and have it email you when something gets listed. Eventually, everything and anything turns up on eBay. You cant lose anything. I couldn't find a replacement anywhere so bought a new one. That was 5 years ago and I haven't had a problem. I have a cracked but functional one I could send you. Anyway the bowl and lid are so close to completely breaking. Cracks like crazy. Anyone know where I can get a replacement that fits I have the same model and would LOVE a new bowl or two. Good luck finding one! It was made in France. I love it and I would never replace it with a new model. Mine is made from solid metal and it is a workhorse. I once wanted a replacement blade which found on Ebay. Hang on to thee vintage models! I have followed all the leads on replacement bowls, to no avail. Am I correct that the Cuisinart CFP 5 or CFP 9 bowl should fit too Cant find a replacement. Mine was made in France by Robot Coupe.

Will one of the Robot Coupe blades work for my cuisinart and if so, which one If someone was selling a base with a burned out motor, I perhaps could just buy the plastic housing from them. It comes off easily with just 5 screws and is much lighter to ship without the motor. But these models are so well built, I dont know if a motor has ever burned out on anyone. I have an older CFP5a model, very functional and though Im the original owner from the early 90s I just started using it. I just bought a DLC7 at an estate sale this morning complete with all optional accessory blades. John Liu, your comparison from years ago of the two units is supremely helpful, thank you!! But if I were buying new today, Id purchase a Breville. I am looking for a replacement work bowl.I've enjoyed it for over 35 years but am in need of a new work bowl.
